Quality & Risk Control System

Built to ensure consistency, safety, and compliance

From material selection to final inspection, our structured quality control process minimizes risks and guarantees reliable performance for global markets.

WHAT ARE THE KEY QUALITY RISKS IN WEARABLE PACKAGING?

And How PYC Solves Them

Will it crack or break during daily use?

Wearable packaging is exposed to constant movement, pressure, and impact.

At PYC, we reinforce critical stress areas and optimize wall thickness to ensure long-term durability.

High-performance materials such as TPE and reinforced PP are selected to reduce fatigue and prevent cracking.

Will it leak in real-life scenarios?

Leakage is one of the most critical risks, especially for portable use.

We design precision closure systems with controlled compression and double-lock mechanisms, validated through pressure, movement, and repeated-use testing.

Will the material react with the formula?

Certain formulations (oils, alcohol, actives) can cause swelling, discoloration, or degradation.

We conduct compatibility testing and carefully select materials to ensure long-term stability and safety.

Will the appearance last over time?

Daily friction, UV exposure, and environmental conditions can affect surface quality.

We apply IMD/IML or UV coatings to improve scratch resistance and prevent fading, ensuring your product maintains a premium look throughout its lifecycle.

Will it stay securely attached when worn?

For wearable designs, attachment reliability is essential.

We optimize structural design and fixation methods to ensure stability, including testing under movement, vibration, and real-use conditions.

Will it perform under different environments?

Temperature and environmental changes can impact performance.

Our products are tested from -20°C to 60°C, including drop tests, fatigue tests, and real-world simulation scenarios.

How do we control risks from the start?

At PYC, quality is built into the development process.

We apply a DFMEA-based approach, involving design, QE, and supply chain teams to identify and eliminate risks before mass production.

We don't just make packaging.
We engineer reliability.
